Author

Diane R. Gehart, Ph.D., Professor, Marriage and Family Therapy Program, California State University, Northridge.

Diane Gehart is the author of Mastering Competencies in Family Therapy: A Practical Approach to Theories and Clinical Case Documentation and The Complete Marriage and Family Therapy Core Competencies Assessment System, the co-editor of Collaborative Therapy: Relationships and Conversations that Make a Difference and the co-author of Theory-Based Treatment Planning for Marriage and Family Therapists. She has also published numerous articles and presents internationally on competency-based education; collaborative, strength-based therapies; mindfulness in therapy; child and family therapy; and philosophical issues in therapy.

Expert Reviewers

The following experts provided consultation for this project.

Charles Arokiasamy, Rh.D., Department Chair and Professor of Rehabilitation Counseling; Counseling, Special Education, and Rehabilitation, California State University, Fresno.

Chad Costello, MSW, Director of Public Policy, The Village, Long Beach, California.

Julie Diaz, M.S., LMFT, Supervising Mental Health Clinician, Madera County Department of Mental Health.

Milena Esherick, Ph.D., Director, Marriage and Family Therapy Program, Wright Institute.

Patricia White Lopez, LMFT, Director of Training, Los Angeles County Department of Mental Health.

Funding

This project was funded by California Mental Health Service Act (MHSA) State Administration dollars.
Purpose of This Bibliography

This annotated bibliography of resources is intended to assist marriage and family therapist (MFT) educators in locating resources to implement the new MFT curricular requirements that will take effect on August 1, 2012 in California. The contents of this bibliography are suggestions only and do not constitute mandatory requirements for MFT educators or students. Deviations from these suggestions do not mean that a course will not meet the new MFT curriculum requirements.

This bibliography is organized by curriculum content areas and provides educators with descriptions of key textbooks, articles, videos, and web resources that they can use in redesigning their curricula to meet the new state standards.

Purpose of the New MFT Curriculum

The BBS describes the purpose of the new curriculum as follows:

The MFT education legislation was developed mainly in response to changes in public mental health required by the Mental Health Services Act (MHSA), passed by voters as Proposition 63 in November 2004. The MHSA is transforming the delivery of public mental health services statewide. Specifically, it requires the development and implementation of client and family driven, integrated, culturally competent, and recovery/resiliency oriented services within a collaborative environment. It requires involving people with mental illness in the system as stakeholders with an equal voice. These new services are guided by a promise to do “whatever it takes” to help people fully recover from mental illness. This transformation demands that those employed in public mental health and related settings have a different perspective and be able to provide different approaches to treatment. (BBS, Statement of Work Bibliography, p. 1).

Organization of Bibliography

The bibliography is divided into two sections: content readings and community resources. The content readings include resources for teaching the new subject areas of the curriculum. The community resources section includes the listing and Internet links to state and county resources, including a listing of county departments of mental health in the state.

The major content areas include:
- Recovery-Oriented Treatment and Community Mental Health
- Substance Abuse, Co-Occurring Disorders, and Addiction
- Documentation
- Evidence-Based Practices and Treatments
- Diversity and Socio-Economic Status
- Law and Ethics
- Pedagogical Resources for Educators
Criteria for Material Selection

The materials in this bibliography were selected on the following criteria:

The selected resource:
- Supports the new BBS curriculum’s emphasis on recovery-oriented treatments and the evidence-base.
- Embodies a strength-based, recovery-oriented, evidence-based, and/or MFT perspective on a given topic (e.g., diversity or substance abuse written from one of these perspectives was selected over other possibilities).
- Provides recent and up-to-date information on a given topic.
- Delivers material in a way that resonates and uses language familiar to MFTs.

In areas that had numerous articles or books on a given subject, such as diversity and substance abuse, the selection was carefully limited based on the above criteria to avoid an unfocused and unwieldy list of resources.

Videos and DVDs

As publishers rarely provide examination copies of videos, most videos were reviewed based on publisher’s descriptions only.

Format for Resources

Each reference includes the following:
- APA Citation or Title
- Description of the resource.
- Website Links: one or more of the following
  - Publisher’s Website is included to assist in locating text in case the direct link to the book’s website is changed by the publisher.
  - Book’s Website provides a direct link to the book’s website to allow instructors to order an examination copy directly from the publisher.
  - Journal’s Website is provided to locate an article; if an educator’s university has a subscription to an electronic copy of the journal, he/she can often download the article for free from the university’s library resources.
Bibliography Highlights

Introduction to Bibliography Highlights:

The following list of “highlights” identifies the most uniquely and/or relevant readings related to the new curriculum.

Criteria for inclusion in highlights:

- Comprehensively and/or uniquely covers key areas of content required in the new curriculum.
- Few if any comparable text(s) for covering the same material.

RECOVERY ORIENTED-TREATMENT

Description: Developed in collaboration with Connecticut’s Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services that received the number one rating from NAMI, this book focuses on the practical elements of implementing recovery-oriented treatment. The text focuses on providing an alternative model to traditional clinical case management and offers tools for practitioners to self-assess their recovery-oriented practices. Recovery concepts are explained in clear, concise language that makes it ideal for those new to the ideas. It includes a list of the Top 10 Concerns about Recovery with responses to each as well as a list of the Top 10 Principles of Recovery-Oriented, Community-Based Care.

Publisher’s Website: www.oup.com/us

Description: This article describes the basic theories and methods of Community Family Therapy, an approach for treating low-income, urban families that integrates developmental and motivational theories. The model includes three levels of engagement: (a) personal and family growth, (b) accessing community resources, and (c) leadership and civic action. The article specifically addresses issues of poverty and the socioeconomic context.

Journal’s Website: www.familyprocess.net

Description: This free, two-page tri-fold outlines the USDHHS definition of recovery and its ten components.

EVIDENCE-BASED PRACTICE AND TREATMENT

Description: This classic article defines evidence-based practice based on how the term is used in the field of medicine: using research to provide treatment that best meets the needs of each client or family. The article provides a five-step model for implementing evidence-based practice in family therapy as well as a detailed outline to help students evaluate individual research studies for their application with clients.

Journal's Website: www.jmft.net

Description: This edited volume describes the extensive evidence base for family therapy practice and reviews numerous evidence-based family therapy treatments. The chapters are organized by presenting problem and include: conduct disorders, substance abuse, childhood behavioral and emotional problems, alcohol abuse, marital problems, relationship enhancement, domestic violence, severe mental illness affective disorders, physical disorders, and meta-analysis of MFT interventions.

DOCUMENTATION

Description: This competency-based textbook teaches family therapy theories using clinical case documentation, including case conceptualization, clinical assessment, treatment planning, and progress notes. The first half of the book covers clinical documentation; the second half covers the major schools of family therapy and includes extensive examples of clinical case documentation for each. The book also includes an introduction to recovery-oriented treatment, evidence-based practice and treatment, common factors models, the evidence base for each theory, philosophical foundations of family therapy, and diversity issues. Grounded in a learning-centered, outcome-based pedagogical model, the book enables programs to measure student learning and includes both case documentation forms and scoring rubrics that are aligned with the nationally defined MFT Core Competencies.

DIVERSITY

Description: A classic in family therapy, Bread and Spirit, describes a structural, strengths-based approach to working with poor families. In this book, Aponte describes the unique life and relational issues faced by poor and minority families. The text includes specific chapters on “family therapy and the community,” “home/community based services,” “the family-school interview: an ecosystemic approach,” “the negotiation of values in therapy,” “about forgiving,” and “strength and vulnerability.” Numerous case examples and transcripts of sessions are included to illustrate key concepts. Although the evidence-base is not highlighted in this book, the eco-structural approach described is an evidence-based approach for working with families with teens with conduct and/or substance abuse issues.

Publisher’s Webpage: www.wwnorton.com

Description: A classic in family therapy, this edited volume arguably provides the most comprehensive coverage of ethnicity of any text on the market. The book includes over 53 chapters, each detailing the family dynamics of a unique ethnic group. In particular, this book is indispensable for students working with diverse populations in urban areas as it includes content on ethnic groups not included in many other diversity texts.

\textit{Description:} In this substantially revised and updated edition, Minuchin et al. detail a family systems approach to conceptualizing and facilitating change with poor and diverse families. The first half of the book provides a clear theoretical description for family-centered work, including family supportive-skills and procedures for promoting change. In the second half of the book, specific models for working with services systems are presented, including substance abuse and foster care. Finally, a description of family-oriented service systems is presented. In addition to addressing issues of socio-economic class and diversity, the book also provides practical depictions of key public service systems.

\textbf{LAW AND ETHICS}

\textit{Description:} This user-friendly handbook for students clearly describes a) how to obtain a degree in marriage and family therapy that qualifies for licensure, b) how to apply and become a Marriage and Family Therapy Intern, c) how to gain hours of work experience towards the license, and d) how to apply to take the licensing exams. The book includes numerous useful “tips” and suggestions for making the process run smoothly each step of the way. This resource will be helpful in addressing the new requirement that MFT programs provide instruction in the licensing process. Programs may also contact the Board of Behavioral Sciences, which will generally provide speakers on the topic of licensing to individual programs.

Introduction to Recovery Oriented Treatment:

The new curriculum calls for integrating principles of recovery-oriented care across the MFT curriculum. Common courses where recovery may be integrated include:

- Community mental health courses: Recovery in public mental health.
- Diagnosis courses: Recovery approaches to diagnosis; new research on prognosis of severe mental illnesses.
- Practical skill courses: Collaborative therapeutic relationship skills; strength-based assessments and interventions.
- Theory courses: How to implement traditional theories within in recovery-oriented treatment environments.
- Law and ethics courses: Dual relationships, boundaries, etc. in recovery-oriented treatment contexts.
- Introduction to the profession courses: International and professional trends related to recovery-oriented mental health and the related consumer trends.

The readings and resources below were selected with these courses in mind, allowing for the possibility of a text to be used in more than one course.

New Curriculum Description:

Integrate the principles of mental health recovery-oriented care and methods of service delivery in recovery-oriented practice environments, among others. (Business and Professions Code [BPC] § 4980.36(c)(1)(B))

Diagnosis, assessment, prognosis, and treatment of severe mental disorders. (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(A))

Introduction to Recovery-Oriented Practice

BOOKS

Description: This book provides a comprehensive overview of recovery, its research foundations, consumer experiences, and treatment options, the authors defining recovery as primarily a process. The text includes sections on recovery basic concepts, consumer experiences, diagnosis issues, research issues, and clinical responsibilities. Examples of recovery-based practice from the US, UK, Europe, and Australia are included as are first person narratives from consumers. The text provides an in depth discussion of the implications of recovery for mental health diagnosis and prognosis as well as measures such as the Recovery Self Assessment, Recovery Knowledge Inventory, and Developing Recovery Enhancing Environments Measure. An e-version of the book is available.

Description: A compendium of previously published research, Recovery from Severe Mental Illness provides an excellent overview of the key studies on the subject and includes first person narratives from consumers. The first section of the book explores the research that supports the move to a recovery paradigm, while the second section reviews studies that support the theory that schizophrenia is a clinical syndrome rather than a disease.

Description: Developed in collaboration with Connecticut’s Department of Mental Health and Addiction Services that received the number one rating from NAMI, this book focuses on the practical elements of implementing recovery-oriented treatment. The text focuses on providing an alternative model to traditional clinical case management and offers tools for practitioners to self assess their recovery-oriented practices. The “practical” element is geared more at the larger system rather than therapeutic techniques.

Publisher's Website: www.oup.com/us

Description: This book reports on the long-term, cross-national study sponsored by the World Health Organization on schizophrenia with over 1000 subjects in 14 countries. The data from this project has provided much of the impetus for rapid adoption of the recovery movement. The most significant outcome of this series of studies was to disprove the long-held assumption that schizophrenia is a chronic and deteriorating condition; instead, this study demonstrated that outcomes are heterogeneous and diverse, with an average of half of all persons diagnosed with the illness achieving meaningful recovery.

Description: An organized text that lays a foundation for understanding recovery by providing an overview of empowerment, powerlessness, individual rights, and coercion as it relates to persons diagnosed with severe mental illness. The book describes how to empower consumers with specific chapters on treatment planning, housing, organizational decision making, planning and policymaking, employment, research, and service provision. The focus is on the broad level of conceptualization of empowering consumers and identifying large system organizations and practices that promote this goal.

Description: Drawing upon the perspectives of consumers, this book describes how mental health professionals can approach treatment with those diagnosed with severe mental illness, emphasizing the importance of social inclusion and acceptance. Part 1 of the book addresses the lived experience of those diagnosed with severe mental illness and introduces the concept of recovery. Part 2 describes how mental health professionals can most meaningfully support persons in recovery, addressing barriers to forming a therapeutic relationship, creating hope, and facilitating personal adaptation. Part 3 provides guidelines for promoting social inclusion, such as developing services that promote access and social connection. The final section addresses issues of power, discrimination, and involvement of consumers in the mental health system.

ARTICLES

Description: A seminal piece in the field, this article describes the essential services in a recovery-oriented system as well as identifies the key principles that define recovery-oriented treatment. In addition, Anthony defines recovery as it applies to the treatment of severe mental illness and compares it to substance abuse and disability approaches. This article provides an introduction to recovery, its key principles, and implementation issues. Numerous charts and graphs make the concepts accessible to the reader.

Journal’s Website:

Description: This two-page article is packed with practical advice about how to create a service environment more recovery friendly. Tips include creating a welcoming entry, specific recovery-focused consumer surveys, and designing physical space that acknowledges the personhood of all involved.

Journal’s Website: www.gale.cengage.com/

Description: This article describes a study that investigated program costs and community functioning of individuals discharged from mental institutions. The study reports on the purpose of discharging patients, evaluation of residential and vocational status of patients discharged, the importance of program support for maintaining independent living, and the ability of patients to maintain residential gains during hospital transition project.

Journal's Website: http://www.bu.edu/cpr/prj/

Description: This article reports on the outcomes of a qualitative study of lived experience of people in recovery from severe mental illness, providing therapists with an “insider’s perspective” of what matters in the process of recovery. The analysis includes quotes from consumers about their personal experiences of recovery, highlighting themes of “having a normal life,” “just doing it,” “making life easier,” and “being good to yourself.” Consumers in the study described recovery occurring within the context of “normal” environments and activities. The discussion section explores the benefits of conceptualizing mental health problems as an integrated part of a person’s life.

Breeding, J. (2008). To see or not to see “schizophrenia” and the possibility of full “recovery.” Journal of Humanistic Psychology, 48, 489-504.

Description: In a harsh critique of current practices, Breeding argues that the current view of schizophrenia (and other serious mental health illnesses) as an “illness” has had grave consequences. He includes controversial evidence, including reviews of court cases related to antipsychotic medications and discusses non-medical treatments with case study evidence.

Journal’s Website: http://www.ahpweb.org/pub/journal/menu.html

Description: This article carefully delineates the definitions of recovery in various contexts, including the definitions that have evolved from WHO research projects on schizophrenia and the consumer-based recovery movements. Davidson and colleagues express their concerns that recovery may become a shibboleth, or frequently cited term that denotes insider status with no significant practical meaning. More specifically, Davidson et al. argue that the lack of consensus around the term recovery has led to inconsistent practical implications. They provide definitions of recovery from physical disorders, trauma, addictions, and mental illness. Davidson and colleagues also warn practitioners about the dangers of giving recovery lip service without substantively changing practice.

Description: This article details the findings of a quantitative study that compared competitive work, community-based activities, and no regular daily activities with persons diagnosed with chronic mental illness. Consumers engaged in competitive work reported and observers noted significantly higher levels of wellbeing and functionality. Surprisingly, there was no difference between consumers enrolled in community-based activities and those with no daily activities scheduled.

Journal’s Website: http://www.springer.com/medicine/psychiatry/journal/10597

Description: In this short but information-dense article, Gagne et al. argue that recovery in the fields of mental health and addictions share more similarities than differences. The article includes a comparison chart that illustrates the similar values, principles, and strategies in both approaches to recovery. It also contains rich citations to recovery literature that include writings by persons in recovery and the longitudinal studies that provide the initial research foundation for recovery. The discussion of similarities of recovery in both disciplines can help students build a shared framework for working with these two populations.

Journal’s Website: http://www.bu.edu/cpr/prj/

Description: In this relatively short article, Farkas et al. attempt to bridge the gap between recovery-oriented approaches to severe mental illness and evidence-based approaches by using recovery as a “value base” for evidence-based treatments. They detail a model that addresses theoretical, practical, and programmatic issues.

Description: In this classic family therapy article, Haley discusses the limitations of organic, psychodynamic, systems, and double-bind theories for working with youth diagnosed with schizophrenia and instead discusses recovery for therapists from these unhelpful theories. He concludes by identifying contemporary practices that have been found to be more effective and/or a theory courses to relate MFT practices to recovery. Although 30 years old, this article clearly outlines the concerns that have given rise to the recovery movement in mental health and also identifies the types of solutions promoted by its proponents.

Journal’s Website: No longer in press; article available from Springer Press.

Description: The article reports on findings from a randomized control study of a recovery-oriented treatment program in Israel. Consumers in the recovery-oriented program demonstrated significantly improved progress toward personal goals compared to those in treatment-as-usual programs. Both groups showed improved coping; neither group showed improved social support. The mixed findings provide fertile ground for class discussion on future limits and potentials of recovery-oriented treatment.

Journal’s Website: http://psychservices.psychiatryonline.org

Description: This article provides an overview of how religious orientation can be used to support the recovery process in the area of mental health, emphasizing how both recovery and religious approaches emphasize the potential of change during times of difficulty. The article includes an analysis of five interviews with consumers. The themes identified in the interviews were self-esteem, empowerment, hope, community connections, and comfort. Hugen’s discussion of religious orientation and recovery in mental health provides an alternative to the more common and structured use of religion in addiction recovery, emphasizing how a consumer’s religious beliefs can be used in a variety of ways to support his/her unique journey.

Journal’s Website: http://www.worldcat.org/oclc/61124454

Description: This article argues for a narrative approach to recovery and understanding experiences of people with severe mental illness. Drawing on the work of Jerome Bruner, the author describes how the narrative approach to creating a life narrative that is coherent and provides meaning is an invaluable tool for recovery-oriented treatment and discusses strategies for addressing dominant discourses related to severe mental illness.

Journal's Website: http://www.psychiatricnursing.org

Description: This article clarifies several myths related to treating older adults with mental illness and outlines 12 principles for treatment promoted by the Older Adult Consumer Mental Health Alliance. Miller offers practical guidelines for working with this unique population.

Available:

Description: This article reviews the current literature on recovery from severe mental illness and identifies key elements across models using an ecological framework that takes into account the individuals and their contextual barriers. The concepts outlined in this article provide a comprehensive overview of the broader implications of recovery-oriented treatment.

Journal's Website: http://www.bu.edu/cpr/prj/

Description: Grounded in postmodern and narrative theories, Roberts argues that recovery-oriented care needs to keep narratives of client experience at the heart of treatment and that overemphasis on the evidence base risks obscuring the personhood of consumers in treatment. He includes a discussion of the construction of narratives about psychopathology, therapy as narrative, narratives of recovery, and qualitative research.

Description: Roberts and Wolfson provide a definition of recovery for persons with severe mental illness that emphasizes the process of personal discovery and includes a comparison chart contrasting principles in the recovery and medical models. The article also provides an operational definition of recovery from schizophrenia as well as a useful description of clinically relevant practices that characterize recovery-based treatment. Although written for psychiatrists, the authors describe guidelines for recovery-oriented practice for all mental health professionals, including the role of the professional, the significance of hope, timing of interventions, uses of medication, risk sharing, etc.

Description: This brief introductory editorial to the inaugural issue of Early Intervention in Psychiatry provides an overview of the potentials and limits of early prevention in the treatment of psychosis, including some hopeful statistics along with realistic cautions. This article emphasizes the potential of prevention and early intervention in recovery-oriented treatment.

Description: This short but provocative article strongly cautions mental health care providers about the possibility of the notion of recovery, arguing that the common understanding of the term (that the person will be back to “normal”) is often misleading and may be counterproductive. A counter-voice in the recovery dialogue, this article offers a reminder to avoid an overly simplistic view of recovery and points out that full recovery from severe mental illness is difficult and not always an attainable goal.
Description: Commissioned by SAMHSA, this paper outlines a plan for how consumers can catalyze a transformation of the mental health system from an institutional culture to one of recovery by creating a consumer-led National Recovery Initiative. It addresses how to develop and finance services needed for recovery-oriented care.

Website: http://mentalhealth.samhsa.gov/publications/allpubs/NMH05-0193/default.asp.

Description: This publication is the final report of the President’s New Freedom Commission on Mental Health, which recommended that the U.S. formally adopt recovery-oriented services in public mental health. This extensive report is divided into six major sections that address the following goals: (a) Americans understand that mental health is essential to overall health, (b) mental health is consumer and family driven, (c) disparities in mental health services are eliminated, (d) early mental health screening, assessment, and referral to services are common practices, (e) excellent mental health care is delivered and research is accelerated, and (f) technology is used to access mental health care and information.

Client Advocacy, Case Management, and Systems of Care

Introduction to Client Advocacy, Case Management, and Systems of Care

The new curriculum requires course content on client-centered advocacy, which refers to helping clients identify and successfully access community and social resources. These activities, sometimes referred to as case management, require that MFTs understand the systems of care, both public and private, for the severely mentally ill in their communities and that MFTs know how to work collaboratively with other professionals. A comprehensive list of community resources in California is included as part of this bibliography to enable educators to acquaint their students with national, state, and local resources.

New curriculum description:

Performing client-centered advocacy including researching, identifying, and accessing resources, or other activities, related to obtaining or providing services and supports for clients or groups of clients receiving psychotherapy or counseling services. (BPC § § 4980.03(b) and 4980.36(d)(1)(B)(ii))

How to connect people with resources that deliver the quality of services and support needed in the community. (BPC § 4980.36(d)(1)(B)(ii)(V))
Systems of care for the severely mentally ill. (BPC § 4980.36(e))
Public and private services and supports available for the severely mentally ill. (BPC § 4980.36(e))
Community resources for persons with mental illness and for victims of abuse. (BPC § 4980.36(e))
Advocacy for the severely mentally ill. (BPC § 4980.36(e))
Case management. (BPC § 4980.36(e))
Collaborative treatment. (BPC § 4980.36(e))

Recovery-Oriented Skills and Treatments

Introduction to Recovery-Oriented Skills and Treatments
The new curriculum requires that MFT programs include instruction in recovery-oriented methods of service delivery. While few texts have been specifically written on micro-skills in “recovery” oriented mental health, the field of MFT has numerous resources within its core literature base that competently achieves this end. In fact, the field of MFT arguably has the most extensive, long-standing, and well-developed therapeutic methods for promoting recovery.

Recovery-oriented methods emphasize the following:

- Developing a collaborative working relationship
- Promoting consumers’ agency in their journeys of recovery and lives more generally
- Maintaining a non-pathologizing view of human behavior
- Harnessing consumer strengths to achieve goals

The texts below have been selected based on these criteria.

New Curriculum Description:

Integrate the principles of mental health recovery-oriented care and methods of service delivery in recovery-oriented practice environments, among others. (Business and Professions Code [BPC] § 4980.36(c)(1)(B))

BOOKS

Description: This book describes a collaborative, dialogical approach to therapeutic relationships, which is characterized by working along side clients in their journeys of transformation. Avoiding textbook techniques, collaborative therapy focuses on creating relationships in which clients feel heard and regain a sense of agency and autonomy. The book covers the historical and philosophical foundations of collaborative therapy and describes the guiding principles for inviting clients to co-explore their situation. Collaborative therapy relies more on a philosophical stance than technique to promote change, thus the book focuses on theoretical descriptions of the work rather than descriptions of micro-skills.

Publisher’s Webpage: http://www.perseusbooksgroup.com/basic/home.jsp

Description: This edited volume includes a highly accessible description of collaborative therapy as well as its applications in therapy, community, educational, and research settings. Of particular interest is the chapter by Haarakangas, Seikkula, Alakare, and Aaltonen, Finnish therapists who have used a collaborative-based recovery-oriented approach with psychotic patients that has resulted unprecedented recovery rates from schizophrenia. Other chapters cover a wide range of clinical issues and contexts in which collaborative therapy has been successfully implemented.

Description: Drawing on evidence-based practices, evidence-based treatments, common factors research, and outcome research, Bertolino describes a detailed integrative helping model for developing strengths-based, collaborative partnerships with clients. The text teaches the specific skills needed to build a collaborative therapeutic relationship, engage clients in an active partnership, determine a direction for treatment, motivate clients for change, help clients change their viewing and doing related to the problem, and support clients in transitioning out of therapy. The text draws heavily on solution-based and collaborative approaches to therapy.

Description: This classic family therapy text describes a non-pathologizing approach to working with client problems. The first half of the text examines linguistic and relational patterns that contribute to problem formation; the second half identifies established techniques and strategies that can be used for problem resolution. This familiar text can easily be adapted and applied for use in teaching a recovery-oriented approach to working with severe mental illness. Written by therapists at the MRI who are well-known for creative, non-pathologizing approaches to working with psychosis and other severe issues, this text provides a system for conceptualizing the complex problems associated with severe mental illness as well as specific interventions based on how the problem was formed or constructed.

Alexander Street Videos.

Description: This online collection of over 300 counseling and psychotherapy videos includes several videos on strength-based micro-skills, such as interviews by Insoo Berg and other solution-focused and narrative therapists. This new online collection is a unique resource that makes videos available to students outside of class. It includes a variety of both traditional and more recovery-oriented approaches to building therapeutic relationships. However, faculty will need to select those particular videos that demonstrate more collaborative and strength-based approaches from the offerings.

Publisher’s Website: www.alexanderstreet.com

Description: Based on de Jong and Berg’s work, this DVD demonstrates interviewing skills discussed in the text of the same title. This DVD is a helpful supplement for use with the text or for demonstrating solution-based interviewing skills.

Website: http://www.insight-media.com/IMGroupDispl.asp

Description: The first disk of this three CD-ROM set includes an overview of the major MFT theories with links to related websites and clips from major theorists. Disk two introduces Client-Focused Family Therapy, which, similar to solution-focused approaches to assessing client motivation, is an approach to adapting one’s style to match the family based on their “cooperation style.” The final disk follows a family therapy case from the referral to termination.

This innovative CD-ROM series is a unique resource for helping teach recovery-oriented treatment as well as more traditional family therapy concepts. Disks two and three can be used to teach strategies for adapting treatment to client needs and for providing practical examples of in-session skills.

Description: This recently revised text describes the family resilience approach and how it applies in a diverse society. Divided into four sections, this book begins by defining resilience and describes a model for use with individuals and families. The second section identifies key family processes that characterize resilience, including belief systems, organization patterns, and community processes. The third section addresses practical applications, both in traditional therapy and community-based programs. In the final section, Walsh discusses resilience in the context of loss, chronic illness, multistressed families, disasters, and reconciliation.

Meeting with Consumers and Their Families

Introduction to Meeting with Consumers and Their Families

The new curriculum includes the requirements that programs provide students with an opportunity to meet with consumers and their families to learn about their experiences of mental illness, treatment, and recovery. To supplement these meetings, educators can also include readings of first-person accounts of severe mental illness.
New curriculum description:

Provide students with the opportunity to meet with various consumers and family members of consumers of mental health services to enhance understanding of their experience of mental illness, treatment, and recovery. (BPC § 4980.36(c)(5))

BOOKS

Description: Based on an extensive qualitative study using a postmodern approach privileging participants’ voices, Cohen has collected first-person narratives of consumer’s experiences of institutional and home treatment of severe mental illness in the UK. Topics include experience of illness, psychiatric treatment, recovery, and self-coping techniques such as drug taking, spiritualism, alternative healing, sleep, and watching television. In addition to consumer narratives, the book also includes a short history of mental illness and psychiatry, an overview of postmodern approach to narrative, and a detailed description of crisis intervention and home treatment as it relates to the study.

Description: This article describes a recovery-oriented approach to shared decision making related to the issue of psychiatric medications. The article describes the conflicts and problems related to medications reported by persons with chronic mental health problems and proposes a model for supporting consumers in deciding how medications can best support them in recovery. Providing a rare and real-world discussion about the use of psychiatric medication with persons with severe mental illness, Deegan proposes a useful model for how practitioners can support consumers in navigating this complex issue.

Description: This article reports on a consumer satisfaction study in a recovery-oriented treatment program for severe mental illness. The most striking finding of the study was that “staff teaching efforts” (psychoeducation) related to medication, illness management, substance abuse, outpatient living, and living skills were most highly correlated with consumer satisfaction.

Description: This article presents a qualitative analysis of one consumer’s experience of recovery, including a detailed discussion of what worked in therapy, the role of medications, and dealing with the mental health system. Although a single case study, this article provides numerous direct quotes from the consumer about a wide range of recovery experiences, and is helpful for classes on recovery and consumer experiences.

Description: In this article, two consumer leaders describe their own experiences with recovery, highlighting the role of hope, personal responsibility, education, advocacy, and peer support. The article also addresses issues related to medication, therapeutic relationships, attitudes of mental health service workers, learned helplessness, and personal safety. Specific recommendations for symptom relief are included. This thorough article offers practical information for therapists wanting to better understand how to be supportive of consumers in the process of recovery, making it a helpful addition to courses on recovery and community mental health.

DATABASE OF CLIENT NARRATIVES

Description: A unique product, Sage Publications and Alexander Street Publishing have jointly released a database that includes therapy transcripts, client narratives, and referenced works. The transcripts are fully searchable and new content is constantly added. It includes over 40,000+ pages of first person accounts of therapy as well as over 2,000 previously unpublished therapy transcripts. An unprecedented resource for training in mental health, MFT educators teaching recovery-oriented treatment can use the client narratives from the database to bring client voices alive in the classroom and related assignments. The database requires an institutional subscription; thus, faculty will need to work with their library to acquire the system.

Introduction to Substance Abuse, Co-Occurring Disorders and Addictions

The new curriculum includes extensive and specific requirements in the area of addictions. In particular, training co-occurring disorders (simultaneous diagnosis of substance abuse and mental health disorders) is emphasized. In most programs, this content will be included in a single course on substance abuse and addictions, but it may also be taught across several courses.

New curriculum description:
Substance abuse, co-occurring disorders, and addiction, including, but not limited to, instruction in all of the following: (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(I))

- The definition of substance use disorders, co-occurring disorders (a mental illness and substance abuse diagnosis occurring simultaneously in an individual), and addiction.
- Medical aspects of substance use disorders and co-occurring disorders.
- The effects of psychoactive drug use.
- Current theories of the etiology of substance abuse and addiction.
- The role of persons and systems that support or compound substance abuse and addiction.
- Major approaches to identification, evaluation, and treatment of substance use disorders, co-occurring disorders, and addiction, including, but not limited to, best practices.
- Populations at risk with regard to substance use disorders and co-occurring disorders.
- Community resources offering screening, assessment, treatment, and follow up for the affected person and family.
- Recognition of substance use disorders, co-occurring disorders, and addiction, and appropriate referral.
- The prevention of substance use disorders and addiction.

Alcohol and Substance Abuse and Addiction

Description: The first solution-focused book on working with drinking, this book describes the approach developed at the Brief Family Therapy Center, which emphasizes client strengths, practical steps, and client motivation. Berg and Miller describe how common solution-focused techniques can be successfully used with persons struggling with drinking. Miller wrote a book for consumers based on the same topic, The Miracle Method: A Radically New Approach to Problem Drinking.

ARTICLES

Description: This article/chapter succinctly reviews the evidence-base for family therapy interventions that address alcohol abuse. The article/chapter includes a review of numerous evidence-based couple and family treatments for alcohol abuse, including models for when the alcoholic resists treatment and when the alcoholic seeks treatment.

Description: This article/chapter succinctly reviews the evidence-base for family therapy interventions that address substance abuse. It includes treatments for substance-abusing adolescents—including Brief Strategic Family Therapy, Functional Family Therapy, Multisystemic, and Multidimensional Family Therapy—and treatments for adults, including Behavioral Couples Therapy.

Description: This study compares solution-focused group therapy with a traditional problem-focused approach for level 1 substance abusers. The results indicated that participants in the solution-focused group score significantly higher on the Beck Depression Inventory and Outcome Questionnaire following treatment. The article also distinguishes solution-focused treatment from motivational enhancement therapies. An outline of the therapy session format is included in the article.

Description: Yeager adapts Roberts’ seven-stage crisis intervention model for use with mentally ill substance abusers using a solution-focused, strength-based perspective. The first half of the article discusses at length the larger context of mental illness treatment, including rates of mental illness, its impact on health care costs, and broad system effects. Numerous case studies illustrate points throughout the discussion.

Description: The text outlines an “integrated” model for treating persons dually diagnosed with mental illness and substance abuse. The text includes chapters on assessing substance abuse, axis I and axis II disorders, motivation enhancement, adolescent treatment, and family involvement.

ARTICLES

Description: This classic article on the subject introduces the harm reduction model, how it developed, how it works, and why it is becoming a major approach to treating addictions. The article emphasizes the pragmatic and compassionate foundations of the approach and identifies the four basic assumptions of the model: (a) it is a public health alternative to the disease or criminal models, (b) it recognizes abstinence as the ideal outcome but accepts the alternative of reduced harm, (c) it has emerged as a consumer-driven model, and (d) it promotes a “low threshold” access to services.

Introduction to Documentation

The new curriculum requires that university programs include professional writing, specifically treatment plans, progress notes, and documentation of services, in their curriculum. Historically, much of the documentation training has occurred at fieldsites, as each site has its own documentation forms. However, with the passage of HIPAA, national standards and regulations for documentation have been established, creating greater uniformity of content if not form.

Professional writing, including documentation of services, treatment plans, and progress notes. (BPC § 4980.36(d)(1)(B)(iv)(IV))

BOOKS

Description: This treatment planning text is designed for recovery-oriented mental health and substance abuse treatment in public mental health systems. It includes the recovery-oriented definition of “person-centered care,” which is not grounded in existential-humanistic therapy but consumer-oriented mental health. Written for practitioners, the text includes a chapter on assessment and understanding the client's narrative as well as chapters on setting goals, specifying objectives, and designing interventions.

Description: This competency-based textbook teaches family therapy theories using clinical case documentation, including case conceptualization, clinical assessment, treatment planning, and progress notes. The first half of the book covers clinical documentation; the second half covers the major schools of family therapy and includes extensive examples of clinical case documentation for each. The book also includes an introduction to recovery-oriented treatment, evidence-based practice and treatment, common factors models, the evidence base for each theory, philosophical foundations of family therapy, and diversity issues. Grounded in a learning-centered, outcome-based pedagogical model, the book enables programs to measure student learning and includes both case documentation forms and scoring rubrics that are aligned with the nationally defined MFT Core Competencies.

Description: Presenting treatment planning from a recovery perspective, this book is divided into three sections: a) the foundations of care planning, including ethical issues, therapeutic risk, and organizational considerations; b) personal experiences of care planning, including perspectives from practitioners and consumers, and c) an overview of how to provide recovery-oriented care planning, including engagement, assessment, promoting inclusivity, and evaluation.

Description: Jongsma and colleagues offer an extensive series of treatment planners, progress note planners, homework planners, and handout planners. The treatment planning series includes specific books on severe and persistent mental illness, family therapy, couples psychotherapy, and addictions.

Description: This textbook provides a comprehensive and detailed overview of documentation standards and practices in mental health. The book has four sections: (a) the importance of record keeping in psychotherapy, (b) the clinical record, (c) documentation of safety issues, and (d) special topics relevant to record keeping, which includes treatment of minors, access to records, and retention of records.

Description: This sourcebook contains 52 different clinical forms, many with examples of completed forms, including payment contracts, release of information, request for records, personal history, couple information form, treatment plans, progress notes, and discharge summaries. A CD-ROM with digital versions of the forms is provided.

Description: This textbook provides an introduction to biopsychosocial assessment, mental status exams, diagnosis, treatment planning, and progress notes, providing a discussion of the rational and legal/ethical issues related to each. One example chart is used to provide an sample of clinical documentation.

Evidence-Based Practice and Treatments

Introduction to Evidence-Based Practices and Treatments

This section covers evidence-based practices (the use of research to design treatment for individual clients and consumers) and evidence-based treatments (carefully designed and researched treatments that are shown to be effective with a specific population) in the field of MFT specifically and mental health more generally.

As the focus of this review is to identify textbooks for classroom use, the following list of references includes resources that provide an introductory overview of these approaches.

Evidence-based Practice

Providing training in evidence-based practice techniques can be easily integrated into MFT courses, such as practicum, theory, and research courses. Key resources are identified for instructing students in this practice.

Evidence-based Treatments

As there are over one hundred evidence-based treatments (or empirically supported treatments), programs cannot train students in all of these and should therefore strive for a more moderate goal of preparing students to understand what these treatments are and how they work. Since all are based on some combination of traditional psychotherapeutic and family theories, training students in these classic approaches is the first step. At minimum, programs should include instruction in how evidence-based models are developed and used as well as address practical issues and controversy related to implementation. In addition, programs may want to include more detailed instruction in one or more commonly used evidence-based treatments in the area of couple and family therapy.

Common Factors

Additionally, training in evidence-based practices and treatments should also cover common factors research in the field. Based primarily on meta-analyses, this strand of research attempts to identify common elements across models that are correlated to successful therapy outcomes.

Evidence-Based Practice in MFT

Description: This classic article defines evidence-based practice using the medical definition of the term: using research to provide treatment that best meets the needs of each client or family. The article provides a five-step model for implementing evidence-based practice in family therapy as well as a detailed outline to help students evaluate individual research studies for their application with clients.

Journal’s Website: www.jmft.net

Description: Designed to help clinicians become better consumers of research, this article details a six-step model for using research in clinical contexts as well as outlining different models for consuming research. In addition, the authors include a list of “short cuts” to make accessing research easier; a case study is used to illustrate the concepts.

The Evidence Base for MFT

Description: An essential text, this edited volume comprehensively describes the extensive evidence base for family therapy practice and reviews numerous evidence-based family therapy treatments. The chapters are organized by presenting problem and include: conduct disorders, substance abuse, childhood behavioral and emotional problems, alcohol abuse, marital problems, relationship enhancement, domestic violence, severe mental illness affective disorders, physical disorders, and meta-analysis of MFT interventions. An updated version of the book is currently in production.

Evidence-Base for General Mental Health

BOOKS

Description: This edited volume covers evidence-based treatments for severe mental illness and community mental health services. The book is divided into four sections: background on severe mental illness and community services; principles of evidence-based mental health care; implementation issues; and specific evidence practices, which include assertive community treatment, dual disorder treatment, supported... employment, illness management, family-based treatments, and medication management.

Publisher’s Website: www.wwnorton.com

Description: This edited volume reviews many of the questions surrounding evidence-based treatments and practices. Chapter topics include criteria that define evidence-based treatments, research necessary to define an evidence-based treatment, effects of the manualization of therapy, diversity and evidence-based practice, and transporting laboratory-validated practices to the field.

Publisher’s Website: www.apa.org/books

Description: This pocket-sized reference book provides practitioners with a concise, user-friendly guide for accessing, interpreting, and applying evidence-based practices in clinical settings. The book includes easy-to-read graphics, glossary of essential terms, and numerous case vignettes to facilitate learning.

Publisher’s Website: www.oup.com/us

Description: This text provides a comprehensive approach to implementing evidence-based practice in mental health treatment. The book is divided into four sections: a) an overview of evidence-based practices, including a five-step model for implementation; b) critically appraising studies for evidence-based practices and intervention effectiveness, including an extensive review of validity, statistics, and research design issues; c) critically appraising studies for alternative evidence-based practice questions, which includes case study and qualitative studies; and d) assessing and monitoring client progress.

Description: This edited volume covers evidence-based practices with an emphasis on treatment of severe mental illness. The book includes chapters on supported employment, evidence-based family services for adults with severe mental illness, evidence-based psychopharmacology, evidence-based treatment for dual diagnosis, evidence-based treatments for children and adolescents, and recovery and the evidence-base. The final chapters of the book address controversies, implementation, and evaluating outcomes.

ARTICLES

Description: This article discusses the problems of trying to implement evidence-based practices in recovery-oriented environments. Anthony et al. argue that most evidence-based practices were developed without awareness or understanding of recovery’s vision and approach. Thus, they suggest that many of these evidence-based approaches are not appropriate for these treatment environments. They identify the deficiencies of these models for recovery contexts and identify future directions for practice.

Description: A definitive article in the field of mental health evidence-based treatments, this unique resource describes the most widely adopted system for determining when a treatment for a specific population or problem is to be considered empirically supported, efficacious, or possibly efficacious.

Also available www.apa.org/divisions/div12/journals.html.

Description: This article provides an update on the American Psychological Association’s task force’s report on empirically validated treatments and includes an extensive but admittedly not exhaustive list of empirically supported treatments as well as extensive discussion about the limits of such treatments, ethical issues, and implementation concerns.

Description: This article reviews the evidence-base for psychoeducation with families who have members diagnosed with a severe mental illness, including an overview of key characteristics for these programs. Dixon et al. also identify the barriers to more effective implementation of family psychoeducation and future directions for this evidence-based practice.

Description: This up-to-date article defines empirically supported therapies and clearly details the training process and options to several key approaches in the field. The highlight of the chapter is an extensive table comparing eight evidence-based approaches in terms of costs, training requirements, time to implementation, materials, fidelity issues, and contact information. Common barriers to implementation are also discussed.

Description: This article reports on a study of APA-accredited programs and training issues related to empirically supported treatments. The results indicated that while classroom education in empirically supported treatments increased, practical training in these treatments actually decreased. The numerous challenges in training and education are discussed along with future directions. The article also includes a helpful list of current empirically supported treatments.

Common Factors

Introduction to Common Factors

In the past decade, the common factors movement has gained significant momentum in the field of marriage and family therapy. Proponents of the common factors model argue that the effectiveness of therapy has more to do with similarities across models than unique factors of a specific model. Two common factors models are readily cited, Lambert’s and Wampold’s, with Lambert’s model having been applied more commonly in practice.

Given the new curriculum requirements to provide instruction on the evidence base of family therapy, programs will want to offer training in the common factors, which can be easily added to courses on theory, practical skills, and/or research.

BOOKS

Descriptions: This edited volume reviews the research foundations of Lambert’s common factors model and provides extensive chapters on each of the four factors: client and extra-therapeutic factors, the therapeutic relationship, therapeutic models, and hope. In addition, it includes several chapters on special applications, including marriage and family therapy, medicine, psychiatric drug treatment, and school settings. Finally, the text includes two chapters on implications of the common factors for third-party payers.

Publisher’s Website: www.apa.org/books

Book’s Website: http://books.apa.org/books.cfm?id=431723A&toc=yes

Description: One of the earliest resources on the subject, this book introduces the common factors as a unifying language for psychotherapy practice. The authors argue that effective therapies have more commonalities than differences. The book goes into detail on each of Lambert's four common factors, discussing implementation and practice issues and includes numerous case examples.

Description: Written by leaders in the field, this book provides an outstanding and balanced view of the common factors research and approach, arguing for a “moderate” view of common factors. The text includes an overview of the research, discusses unique factors in couple and family therapy, proposes a meta-model of change in couples therapy, and reviews the case against common factors. In addition, Sprenkle et al. discuss practical issues, such as matching therapist behavior with client motivation, the importance of a strong therapeutic alliance, and the role of theory. Implications for training, supervision, treatment, and research are also discussed.

Publisher’s Website: www.guilford.com

ARTICLES

Description: Situating their discussion in the common factors debate, Blow et al. review the research findings on the role of the therapist and its relation to treatment outcomes. The article includes recommendations for training and research, including suggestions of how to train for competence in common factors.

Journal’s Website: www.jmft.net

Description: In this seminal article on common factors in the field of MFT, Sprenkle and Blow argue that treatment effectiveness is more closely related to common factors across models than distinctive features of individual approaches. They present a “moderate” approach to common factors, arguing that individual treatment theories still have an important role in MFT training, albeit a different role than most typically expect.

Evidence-Based Treatments

Introduction to Evidence-Based Treatments

The resources below include readings for programs that want to include more extensive training in one or more evidence-based treatment. While far from a complete review of the over one hundred or more evidence-based treatments, this list provides ideas for specialized readings in family therapy on this topic. Programs may want to contact their local county mental health departments and agencies to learn which evidence-based treatments are currently in use in students’ potential field placement and work sites.

Note: Additional evidence-based treatment resources are also reviewed in Recovery-Oriented Treatment and Substance Abuse Treatment sections above.

BOOKS

Description: Technically an evidence-based practice rather than evidence-based treatment, Gottman’s research on marriage and divorce is an essential component of the marriage and family evidence base. The Marriage Clinic is a treatment manual for Gottman’s couples therapy approach and includes numerous questionnaires used for assessment and determining the focus of treatment. The book also includes several interventions and exercises for use with clients as well as a comprehensive review of his research on divorce and stable marriages.

Book’s Website: http://www.guilford.com/cgi-bin/cartscript.cgi?page=pr/henggeler.htm&dir=pp/cpap&cart_id=299547.13819

Description: This book is a treatment manual for perhaps the best researched couples therapy approach, emotionally focused couple therapy. The text provides an overview of the theoretical foundations, descriptions of each stage of therapy, and detailed explanations of the assessments and interventions used in each stage.

Publisher’s Website: www.routledge.com

Description: This SAMHSA treatment manual provides a detailed description of multidimensional family therapy, an evidence-based, structural-strategic treatment for teen substance abuse; this particular manual targets cannabis abuse.

Description: This book provides a detailed and practical description of mindfulness-based cognitive therapy, which shows promising outcomes for preventing depression relapse. Given that over 50% of persons successfully treated for Major Depression relapse within 12 months, the issue of depression relapse is critical in the treatment of severe and persistent mental illness. Mindfulness is also used for relapse prevention with anxiety, substance abuse, and other mental health disorders.

Publisher’s Website: www.guilford.com

Description: This text is the treatment manual for functional family therapy, which systematically combines elements of strategic, structural, and cognitive-behavioral therapies as part of an evidence-based approach to working with troubled youth. The text includes a detailed description of the approach, clinical interventions, and applications in community environments.

Description: This online book provides the best description of how brief strategic family therapy is conducted. This structural-strategic approach to working with substance abusing minority youth is clearly organized for practitioners wanting to implement BSFT, including an introduction to basic concepts, assessment, intervention, family engagement, and outcome research.

Description: This edited volume provides an outstanding overview of evidence-based practices for a range of mental health issues, including substance abuse, depression, anxiety disorders, schizophrenia, PTSD, eating disorders, self-harm, and sexual offending. The book also addresses special populations, such as families, ethnic and racial minorities, adolescent substance abuse, the elderly, and incarcerated persons.

ARTICLES AND CHAPTERS

Description: This article reviews the research literature on the effectiveness of mindfulness for a range of physical and mental health disorders, including depression, anxiety, substance abuse, eating disorders, and personality disorders. Of particular interest, mindfulness practices are gaining increasing support for preventing relapse of depression, a severe and typically chronic disorder that has a high rate of relapse.

Description: This chapter describes the Open Dialogue Approach to treating psychosis, a postmodern, collaborative approach that shares many recovery principles. Implementation of this approach over the past 20 years in the Lapland region of Finland has dramatically reduced the incident of chronic psychotic disorders and resulted in impressive recovery rates as high as 77%. This chapter provides an overview of the treatment approach and research findings.

Description: This article reviews more than 30 randomized trials on family psychoeducation in the treatment of schizophrenia, bipolar, depression, and other disorders and identifies common interventions, such as empathic engagement, education, ongoing support, client resources, social network enhancement, problem solving, and communication skills. In addition, McFarlane and colleagues discuss implementation in routine treatment settings.

Description: This website provides up-to-date information on empirically supported treatments, include several journal articles, reports for task forces, and links to useful resources.

Institute for the Study of Therapeutic Change: Outcome Rating Scale and Session Rating Scale

Description: Featuring the work of Scott Miller, Barry Duncan and associates, this website provides numerous resources on the common factors and related outcome-based research. Of particular interest, the site provides free access to two brief rating scales for measuring treatment effectiveness: the Outcome Rating Scales and the Session Rating Scales. These are outstanding training tools that can be integrated into fieldwork experiences to help students better address the needs of those they serve.

Introduction to Diversity, Socio-economic Status, and Poverty Section

Marriage and family therapy education has included diversity issues for years. In fact, many programs in California have extensive training in this area, some offering bilingual training and multicultural emphases.

The new curriculum contains all of the former requirements and adds a new emphasis on how poverty and economic status impact mental health and recovery. In addition, the curriculum addresses the interaction between various elements of diversity, such as ethnicity, class, gender, immigration status, spirituality, sexual orientation, etc. The effects of diversity on individual and family development must also be included in the updated curriculum. Finally, the requirements also include specific training in the racial, cultural, linguistic, and ethnic backgrounds of persons living in California.

The following resources were selected to address only these new areas of instruction.

New curriculum description:

Integrate an understanding of various cultures and the social and psychological implications of socioeconomic position, including an understanding of how poverty and social stress impact an individual’s mental health and recovery. (BPC § 4980.36(c)(1)(C))

Cultural competency and sensitivity, including a familiarity with the racial, cultural, linguistic, and ethnic backgrounds of persons living in California. (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(D))

Multicultural development and cross-cultural interaction, including experiences of race, ethnicity, class, spirituality, sexual orientation, gender, and disability, and their incorporation into the psychotherapeutic process. (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(E))

An understanding of the effects of socioeconomic status on treatment and available resources. (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(F))

The broad range of matters and life events that may arise within marriage and family relationships and within a variety of California cultures, including instruction in all of the following: (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(C)(iii, viii-x))

- Cultural factors relevant to abuse of partners and family members.
- Poverty and deprivation.
- Financial and social stress.

Developmental issues from infancy to old age, including instruction in: (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(B)(iv-vii))

- A variety of cultural understandings of human development.
- The understanding of human behavior within the social context of socioeconomic status and other contextual issues affecting social position.
- The understanding of human behavior within the social context of a representative variety of the cultures found within California.
- The understanding of the impact that personal and social insecurity, social stress, low educational levels, inadequate housing, and malnutrition have on human development.
BOOKS

Description: This text provides an in depth description of how to effectively work with black families. Divided into three major sections, the book begins by describing the cultural and racial context of African-American families, including issues such as extended family patterns, role flexibility, gender, spirituality, and divorce. The second section discusses treatment issues, such as the therapist’s use of self, value conflicts, and appropriateness of various therapeutic models. In the final section, socioeconomic class and diverse family structures are covered in detail.

Description: Based on a review of the literature, this article details a three-phase critical conversational model for helping clients identify and articulate their experiences of multiracial identities. Two case examples are included to illustrate this model.

Journal’s Website: www.jmft.org

Description: This article discusses issues of stigma, poverty, and victimization and how they affect the recovery process for persons with severe mental illness. Specific treatment and case management issues are provided.

Description: In this provocative article, Smith argues that therapist classism is still a significant barrier to effective treatment with clients who live in poverty. The article reviews the history of mental health practitioners’ awareness of the issue of class, including an overview of the specific discipline of family therapy. In addition, she discusses four key barriers to treatment using case examples.

Description: Written with educators in mind and citing a social justice framework, this article describes the importance of including poverty and social class as part of diversity training for mental health professionals. Smith recommends that educators include supplemental curricula on social class; encourage the exploration of privilege and personal reactions to poverty; apply social justice models in supervision; and teach flexible approaches to interventions.

Description: Grounded in a social justice model, Waldegrave argues that the social and therapeutic problems presented in therapy stem from contextual issues related to culture, gender, and socioeconomic status. The article discusses the impact of public policy and service delivery systems, and encourages mental health practitioners to be agents of change to promote equality and inclusion.

Description: This article describes the development and evaluation of a family-focused, culturally informed therapy for schizophrenia. It also includes a practical review of the literature related to key issues in the treatment of schizophrenia and describes how these are affected by culture.
Diversity and Family Development

Description: This classic family therapy text has been substantially revised over the years to integrate diversity and socioeconomic issues. The book introduces the family life cycle and discusses its relation to individual developmental models and its applications with a wide variety diversity issues, such as culture, social class, gender, migration, loss, divorce, remarriage, sexual orientation, substance abuse, violence, and chronic illness.

Introduction to Law and Ethics

The revised curriculum adds two new elements to law and ethics training:

1) difference in legal and ethical standards based on work setting, and
2) training in licensing law and processes.

Differences in Ethical and Legal Standards

There are limited specific resources on the differences in legal and ethical standards for various marriage and family work settings. Much of the literature on recovery-oriented treatment and community mental health care has imbedded within it discussions of alternative ethical standards and expectations. Instructors should review the above listed resources on Recovery for resources on ethics in recovery-oriented contexts in addition to considering those in this section.

Additionally, as MFTs work in more diverse practice environments, it is critical that educators increasingly emphasize the process of ethical decision making rather than mechanical adherence to ethical codes designed for traditional private practice settings serving middle and upper class clients. Thus, the area of teaching ethics is likely to be more challenging and nuanced in the years ahead.

Licensing Law

Thankfully, the BBS has recently published a user-friendly guide to the licensing process for MFTs in California that will be an excellent resource for educators in meeting this new requirement.

New curriculum description:

Differences in legal and ethical standards for different types of work settings. (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(J)(vi))
Licensing law and licensing process. (BPC § 4980.36(d)(2)(J)(vii))

BOOKS

ARTICLES

Description: A twist on the typical ethical discussion, Evans proposes that patients also have duties and responsibilities in the treatment process. In this article, he identifies ten duties, ranging from participating in health schemes to promoting one’s own recovery. These are discussed in the context of a range of objections—principled, societal, epistemological, and practical. Evans argues that these duties can be used to promote a collaborative, problem-solving partnership between consumers and clinicians.

Journal’s Website: http://jme.bmj.com/

Description: In this thought-provoking piece, Fardella argues that the recovery model represents an approach to the self as a self-determining agent that is found in contemporary philosophy, specifically the works of Michel Foucault and Jurgen Habermas, philosophers who are also cited in narrative, collaborative, and solution-based therapies. The article provides a model based on Habermas’ discourse ethics that can be used to dialogically resolve differences between client and therapist.

Journal’s Website: http://www.springer.com/humanities/journal/10912

Description: Focusing on the ethical guideline of promoting consumer autonomy, this article details three case studies of the dilemmas surrounding patient self-governance in an acute psychiatric unit. The authors suggest small changes in staff behavior and institutional procedures that can enhance consumer autonomy in in-patient facilities.

Journal’s Website: http://jme.bmj.com/

Description: This article describes the results of a qualitative study in the European Union that investigated ethical issues in community mental health services. The following ethical dilemmas were identified in the study: community vs. hospital care; a life with care vs. a life without care; stimulation of the client toward greater responsibility vs. protection against such responsibility; budgetary control vs. financial incentives; and respect for the client vs. the needs of others (e.g., neighborhood residents).

Journal's Website: http://jme.bmj.com/

Description: In this short article, Storey and colleagues discuss the impact of labels and prejudice on persons in recovery, arguing that systematic discrimination significantly impacts a person’s ability to successfully pursue recovery. They briefly discuss a recovery education strategy to reduce disempowering practices to help clinicians create safer and more supportive treatment environments.

Introduction to Pedagogical Resources

Implicit in the new curriculum is a move towards a more learning-centered, outcome-based teaching pedagogy that focuses on providing instruction on the competencies and practical skills that trainees and interns will need in the field. This move toward competency-based education is consistent with trends in MFT and mental health more broadly. More specifically, the list of 128 MFT Core Competencies developed by a task force commissioned by the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy is an unparalleled and invaluable resource for implementing the new curriculum as most of the content in the new curriculum is also identified in the Core Competencies.

The following list of resources is designed to provide MFT educators with readings in how to implement the new curriculum.

BOOKS

Description: Containing numerous worksheets and self-assessments to assist faculty, this book provides instructors with a step-by-step guide for transforming any course using a learner/learning-centered model. The text is based on Weimer’s five key principles (see text below) and includes an overview of rubrics.

Publisher’s Website: www.josseybass.com

Description: Written in an accessible and down-to-earth style, this text introduces instructors to outcome-based assessment as part of learner-centered education. The authors guide readers in the often messy process of defining learning outcomes, developing measures, and then aligning these with course content. The text includes discussion of the practicalities as well as implications for faculty development and university culture.

Publisher’s Website: http://styluspub.com

Description: An ebook with scoring rubrics, this assessment system is the only complete assessment system for measuring the 128 MFT Core Competencies and has been adopted by nearly a third of COAMFTE accredited master’s degree programs. The system includes eight assessment instruments with scoring rubrics and a faculty manual that describes learning-centered, outcome pedagogy. The manual details a seven-step process for conceptualizing, implementing, and refining a custom assessment system. The system is already correlated to the MFT Core Competencies, greatly simplifying the accreditation process for COAMFTE and CACREP programs. Additionally, these learning outcomes can also be used to meet WASC accreditation requirements. A California edition of the system is available that includes recovery-oriented assessment.

Book’s Website: http://www.mftcompetencies.org/page5/page5.html

Description: This workbook style text provides detailed instructions and numerous examples on how to create syllabi that support learning-centered course design. The author integrates a thoughtful discussion of learning-centered teaching philosophy and its practical implementations throughout.

Publisher’s Website: http://www.josseybass.com/WileyCDA/

Description: This highly practical text provides a comprehensive introduction to scoring rubrics, which are a hallmark of learning-centered, outcome-based instruction. The text is divided into two parts, the first introducing rubrics and providing an overview of how to construct one. The second half describes the use of rubrics in different contexts, including four different models for using rubrics and discussing how to construct rubrics in collaboration with other faculty.

Publisher’s Website: http://styluspub.com

Description: Written by one of the most highly regarded authorities on the subject, this text provides a comprehensive overview of learner-centered teaching. The book is organized around five key principles: the balance of power, function of content, role of the teacher, responsibility for learning, and purpose and process of evaluation. The book also includes a thoughtful discussion on practical concerns, such as responding to resistance, developmental issues, and tips for making it work. Sample syllabi and learning assignments are also included.

ARTICLES

Description: In this pragmatic article, Chenail provides an overview of competency-based and learning-focused education in family therapy. To illustrate the approach, he describes how he has implemented these ideas to teach research competencies in a research in marriage and family therapy course using an “Evidence-Based Practice Assignment.”

Journal's Website: www.jmft.net

Description: This article discusses the practical implications of designing a learning-centered, outcome-based pedagogy based on the MFT Core Competencies. It includes a discussion of the history of the competency movement, a comparison with other mental health disciplines, and a seven-step model for implementing a comprehensive assessment system.

Journal's Website: Until published, contact author at dgehart@csun.edu for a draft copy.

Description: This article describes how four MFT programs have successfully integrated research and clinical training in their programs. Hodgson et al. discuss the usefulness and limitations of the Boulder scientist-practitioner model and its implications for MFT training. Specific recommendations and strategies are also included.

Journal's Website: www.jmft.net

Description: A publication of the Annapolis Coalition, which was developed to address workforce issues in mental health, this article outlines 16 best practices in behavioral workforce education and training based on the extensive research conducted by the organization.

Description: This article provides a comprehensive overview of competency development in the field of behavioral health, including addiction counseling, interdisciplinary health professions, marriage and family therapy, psychology, psychiatric nursing, psychiatric rehabilitation, psychiatry, and social work. In addition, competency work with special populations is also addressed, including children’s mental health, severe and persistent mental health, recovery-based treatment, diverse populations, and peer specialists.

Journal's Website: http://www.springer.com/public+health/journal/10488

Description: This article details the use of the OSCE, a common tool for assessing competencies in the field of medicine, in marriage and family therapy. Miller details how it has been used in a master's level marriage and family therapy program to assess student learning.

Journal’s Website: www.jmft.net

Description: Attending to a unique area of specialty, this article details how Miller and colleagues have developed a measure for assessing student competencies in forensic MFT, focusing on how to prepare students to be expert witnesses in family law cases.

Journal's Website: www.jmft.net

Description: Miller and colleagues explore the Core Competency movement in marriage and family therapy by considering it within the broader competency discourse. Specifically, they discuss competency efforts in education, law, and medicine and identify common dilemmas and promising practices.

Journal's Website: www.jmft.net

Description: Written by members of the steering committee for the AAMFT Core Competencies Task Force, this article documents the development of the MFT Core Competencies, including their purpose, design, and pedagogical foundations. Nelson and colleagues discuss applications and future directions. The entire set of 128 competencies is included in the appendix.

Journal's Website: www.jmft.net

Description: Already in use at numerous MFT programs around the country, the Basic Skills Evaluation Device is an early example of a rubric for assessing students in practicum settings. The article includes a copy of the measure as well as describing how it was developed.

Journal's Website: www.jmft.net

Description: In this article, Nelson and Smock provide a useful introduction to outcome-based education and competency assessment in marriage and family therapy. The article outlines key issues and concerns as well as future directions for MFT education.
